On October 10, 2013, California Governor Jerry Brown signed into law AB 218, which requires state and local government agencies to remove questions about convictions from their job applications by Tuesday, July 1st. Under the new law, applicants for public sector jobs in California may be asked about their conviction history later in the hiring process but not up front. Delaying conviction-history inquiries in hiring is commonly known as “ban the box” and is intended to mitigate the blanket exclusion that job-seekers with criminal records often face when seeking work.

These fair-chance hiring policies have been embraced across the country, and there are now 12 states and almost 70 U.S. cities and counties that have adopted them.

As summarized below, the National Employment Law Project surveyed the 10-largest counties and 10-largest cities in California to document their compliance with the new law. We found that California’s public sector employers have been overwhelmingly responsive to the requirements of AB 218.

Basics of AB 218

AB 218 applies to all public sector employers, including the state, counties, cities, and special districts. It requires that these employers remove from their employment applications the question that asks candidates about their conviction history.

Under AB 218, the question cannot be asked until a candidate is determined to meet the “minimum employment qualifications” for the desired position. Agencies retain the discretion to ask about an individual’s conviction history later in the hiring process, such as during the conditional-offer phase. AB 218 does not apply to jobs in criminal justice agencies or school districts, and employers can continue to ask about an individual’s conviction history on the job application if a background check is required by law, as is the case for a number of occupations regulated by the state.

The bill was authored by Assemblymember Roger Dickinson. It was sponsored by the National Employment Law Project, All of us of None, Legal Services for Prisoners with Children, and PICO California.

Survey Methodology

We surveyed the 10-largest cities¹ and 10-largest counties² in California to determine whether they would be in compliance with AB 218 by the July 1st implementation deadline. The total population of Californians living in these counties and cities is 28,596,347, or 75 percent of California’s total population.

¹ Last on the list, Anaheim, is the 10th largest city with a population of 346,161. The top-10 most populous cities are Anaheim, Bakersfield, Fresno, Long Beach, Los Angeles, Oakland, Sacramento, San Diego, San Francisco, and San Jose.
We focused on the 10-largest cities and counties because they cover the vast majority of the state’s population, and contacting all the counties and the hundreds of cities and special districts would have required an extraordinary investment of resources. We received a 100 percent response rate to the survey. We also received information from California’s Department of Human Resources on the state’s compliance efforts.

Several cities and counties, even before the enactment of AB 218, already did not request criminal record information on their job applications. Those cities and counties (several of which are not included in the 10-largest lists) are Alameda County, Berkeley, Carson, Compton, East Palo Alto, Long Beach, Oakland, Pasadena, Richmond, San Diego, San Francisco City and County, and Santa Clara County.

Survey Findings

Attached to this memo are tables of the fair-chance hiring policies of the 10-largest counties, the 10-largest cities, and selected other cities. The Appendix includes an example application from a local agency that includes the “before and after” AB 218 versions.

1. The California State Policy

The State of California has implemented the requirements of AB 218. The state had in place a policy that was adopted in June 2010 under the Schwarzenegger administration, which is being updated.

2. County and City Policies

All of the 10-largest counties and cities in the state have complied with AB 218, thus covering 75 percent of the state’s population. These counties and cities represent a broad cross-section, from Los Angeles, San Diego, Orange and Riverside counties in Southern California, to Fresno, Bakersfield, and Sacramento in the Central Valley, to Alameda, Contra Costa, Santa Clara counties and the City and County of San Francisco in the Bay Area.

The counties of Alameda, Riverside, and Santa Clara, and the cities of Long Beach, Oakland, San Diego, and San Francisco, did not ask about criminal history on their job applications before enactment of AB 218.

Around half of the largest counties (Los Angeles, San Diego, Riverside, and Santa Clara) and cities (Anaheim, Fresno, Oakland, San Diego, and San Jose) went beyond the minimum requirement of the new law and are delaying consideration of an applicant’s criminal history until the employer has made a conditional offer of employment.

3. Policies Extended to the Private Sector

Some cities have also extended their policy to include private employers and/or private government contractors.

- The City and County of San Francisco: Removed the conviction history question from the job application in 2005 as applied to public sector workers. In 2014, the Fair Chance Ordinance was unanimously passed by the Board of Supervisors and signed by the mayor, covering private employers and affordable housing. Conviction-history inquiries are permitted after the first interview.

2 Last on the list, Fresno, is the 10th largest county with a population of 952,116. The top-10 most populous counties are Alameda, Contra Costa, Fresno, Los Angeles, Orange, Riverside, Sacramento, San Bernardino, San Diego, and Santa Clara.

3 San Francisco is a city and county, but is referred to here as a “city” because it is included in the top-10 list of cities, but is not populous enough to make the top-10 list of counties.

- Compton: Delayed conviction history inquiries in hiring in 2011 as applied to both public sector employees and contractors doing business with the city. The city permits background checks only after a conditional offer has been made.

- Richmond: Removed the conviction-history question from the job application in 2011 as applied to public sector workers. In 2013, it passed an ordinance applying to contractors that do business with the city, and their subcontractors. Background-check information cannot be requested unless it is required for the position by federal or state law, or the position is determined to be “sensitive.”

4. Additional Findings

Many cities and counties contract with a private entity to help process their job applications online. NEOGOV is a widely used private service. NEOGOV has confirmed that its system allows employers to exclude conviction questions from the application. In response to AB 218, it has added a feature that allows employers to ask questions about criminal history at later stages in the application process.

Conclusion

California has joined a growing list of states that have enacted a fair-chance hiring policy, known widely as “ban the box.” Fair-hiring policies have taken hold across the United States and are in effect in almost 70 cities and counties and 12 states. In addition, the governors of Illinois and New Jersey are expected to sign recently passed legislation, and Georgia’s governor is poised to issue an executive order covering state employment. Four states—Hawaii, Massachusetts, Minnesota, and Rhode Island—have extended their fair-hiring policies to include private sector employers as well as the public sector. Several major retailers, including Walmart, Target, and Bed Bath & Beyond, have embraced delaying conviction-history inquiries as well.

Most recently, President Obama’s “My Brother’s Keeper” task force also endorsed fair-chance hiring. The task-force report recommended “implement[ing] reforms to promote successful reentry, including hiring practices, such as ‘Ban the Box,’ which give applicants a fair chance and allow employers opportunity to judge individual job applicants on their merits as they reenter the workforce.”

APPENDIX

This appendix contains two job applications from the City of Sacramento. The first application is the most current version, and is fully compliant with AB 218. The second is the out-of-date application, predating AB 218. In comparing the pre-AB 218 application and new application, we direct you to the question labeled “convictions” on the top of page 3 of the prior application. In reading through the new application, you will see that no questions regarding conviction history are asked, thus ensuring the new application complies with AB 218.
