The Business Case: Becoming a Fair-Chance Employer

Our broken criminal justice system has dire effects on our communities and families—particularly on people of color. When we look past the stigma of a record, we find talented and qualified workers. Giving a fair chance to work opens your talent pool, and is good for the economy and public safety.
“We need to move beyond the two prongs of ‘bottom-line’ and ‘growth’ as companies, and understand that we all will thrive when we include the third prong of ‘investing in the community.’” — Business owner

Employers can be part of the solution.

1. Lead a fair-chance culture shift. Negative stereotypes of people with records are tenacious. Changing hearts and minds will require a genuine commitment from leadership internally and publicly.

2. Understand your hiring policy and align it with existing laws. Misconceptions are common. Federal anti-discrimination law actually prohibits blanket bans against any person with a record.

3. Create a better policy. Ban-the-box and delay inquiries until the conditional offer. We are all subject to biases—conscious or not. To minimize unfairness, evaluate each job candidate’s talents and skills before considering a record.

4. Provide training, assess outcomes, and innovate. To implement the new policy, educate, create buy-in, and train personnel. Commit to evaluating the effectiveness of the new policy and continuously improve.

Learn more.
Contact Michelle Natividad Rodriguez (mrodriguez@nelp.org), Senior Staff Attorney.

End Notes
1 NELP (2016)
2 Bucknor & Barber, CEPR (2016).
4 Study and employers cited in Research Summary, NELP (2016).
6 Derek Barrett, founder and CEO of D and B Painting Co., Inc.